

Staying the course

More than 1,000 Long Islanders of all ages gathered at the Town of Oyster Bay Golf Course for the CancerCare 13th annual Lung Cancer Walk for Hope yesterday. This showing of support for patients, survivors, loved ones, caregivers and the bereaved will benefit CancerCare's Lung Cancer Support Program, the only ongoing lung cancer support program on Long Island. ■ More LI top photos: newsday.com/topphotos

GLEN COVE

No-stopping zone extension proposed

The Glen Cove City Council is scheduled to vote tomorrow night on a proposal to extend a no-stopping zone near the Sea Cliff Long Island Rail Road station.

Stopping and parking are now barred on the north side of Sea Cliff Avenue, from Glen Keith Road to 65 feet east, toward the LIRR tracks.

The proposed ordinance would extend the prohibition by another 40 feet, to ban parking for 105 feet east of the intersection with Glen Keith.

Some residents of the Trousdell Village condominiums on Glen Keith Road had requested the change and police officials concurred, said city spokeswoman Lisa Travatello.

Drivers say cars stopped and parked along Sea Cliff Avenue block their sightlines, a problem exacerbated by the downhill slope of Sea Cliff toward the railroad tracks, she said.

Sea Cliff Avenue is a busy street, especially near train arrival and departure times, she said.

"It presents a safety challenge for residents of Glen Keith Road looking to get on Sea Cliff Road," Travatello said.

ISLIP

Animal shelter urges older pet adoption

The Islip Town animal shelter and Adopt-a-Pet Center is celebrating National Adopt a Senior Pet Month with free adoptions for any shelter animal over the age of 6.

The shelter's nonprofit volunteer group, Live.Love.Bark, will pay for any adoption fees for senior shelter residents as long as the application is filed from Nov. 1 through Nov. 30. Those fees are $105 for dogs and $65 for cats, which cover the cost of spaying or neutering, vaccines and microchips.

The shelter will conduct its standard adoption process, including requiring that applicants who rent their homes provide a notarized letter from the landlord stating they are allowed to have a pet in the household without limits on breed or weight of the animal.

"Dogs and cats at the age of six or older make perfect companions. At this age, they are usually calmer, well behaved, and housebroken," Islip Town Supervisor Angie Carpenter said in a news release.

Visit the shelter's website at facebook.com/islipanimals to see the available animals, or visit the shelter at 210 South Denver Ave. in Bay Shore.
